New has been received per steam et. Bertha, from Onalaska, stating that a delactment of marines from the U. S. Sleamship Yorktown, fired several volleys into the pilot house of the steamer Polar Bear seriously wounding the chief angineer. The Polar Bear is used as a tender for the canseries at Bristol Bay, and was returning to Astoria after last season's work. While passing through False Fass, August I, she ran athore. A crowd of armed men with long rifles appeared from behind the bluffs and without warning fired on the steamer. She god away muslly, however, and left for Onalaska, tid reported the affair to the captain of the Utited States steamship Adams, who said the commander of the Yorktown left a delachment of marines at False Pass with instructions to allow no vessels to pass by and it was probable the marines mistook the Polar Sear for a British posching steamer. The affair has created intense excitment at Onalaska.

Purdue, work for which he is particularly wail fitted.

The death of Mr. George M. Adams, of Ocean street, De ring, was a very sad occurrence. Mr. Adams was at work haying, and had only two more loads to hauling on Monday afterboon. The load rext to the last was unusually large, and Mr. A ifma attempted to bind it with a rope, which he attached to the front of the rack and hauled backlover the top of the load. Mr. Adams stood on the back edge of the load, hauling on the rope, while his men stood on the ground and pulled also. Suddienly the rope broke, and Mr. Adams was precipitated headlong to the ground. It is struck on his head and shoulders, receiving fatal injuries. Apparently the apinal cord was broken or injured, for, while his intellect was clear to the last, his limbs and body were paralyzed. He lingered along until morning. He was able to talk with his family very nearly to the last. Mr. Adams was 57 years old, and a prominer teitizen of Deering. He went out in the First Maine Regiment in 1861, and was a member of Bosworth Post.

A Farmington gentleman tells the Chroncle a good story of the sagacity of the purple martlus, which abound in that vicinity. This gentleman has over fifty of these social birds in the house upon his grounds. A day or two ago, while the birds were flying about the garden, a cat caught one of the marthas and started off with it in her mouth, the bird drying piteously. Quick as a fash however, the whole flock of martins were after pussy, lighting or her birds as "thick as fiers, pecking and seratching her and acreaming as only martins can. Puss could not stand this very long, and she dropped the martin, arched her back up, spit and ran for life." Then the birds left her and all New to the houre, toully chattering over the rescue of their courade.

Eighteen of the tweaty freight cars filled with wool, cotton, hay and other merchandise, two passenger coaches and two watchmen's houses were burned. The fires occurred at places where 'he firemen could not stay the flames on account of the absence of water and difficulty of access to the fires. A water task adjacent to the coal trestles was smashed and the engine taking water there wheeked by a string of by misplaced switches.

The first intimation that anything, was wrong was when the coal cars were set toose and demolished the water tank. Then the finnes broke out. Capt. Wuts of the fifth precient put a force of a dozen officers in the yard as soon as the alarm was given. The officers were unable to the days.

One of the most cowardly things done was the throwing of the switches under passenger train No 17 at William street at 7 30 to-night. Two passenger coaches were thrown from the track. The conductor does not think anybody was hart though many were tadly frightesed. Fifty men boarded passenger train. No. 3 at 11 this morning and molested the employes driving them off. The crew finally succeeded in gesting the train to the station.

A family named Morgan, living in Hampden about a mile from the Bangor coundary, was taken violently ill on Saturday by eating potatoes on which Pares green had been used to kill off the omnipresent potate bug. The family consisted of father, noticer and son, the latter working in one of the mills near there. Saturday morning they all ate heart.ly of the potatoes. The son went to work as usual but has not been laboring long, before he was taken with a severe sickness and he was carried home by his fellow workmen.

On arriving at his home it was found that his father and mother were both prostrated, the mother being very law. Physicians were at once sent for and as soon as they had applied the proper remedies the father and son improved conelderably, but it is said that the is still very iii. the alert and there is no rusting. Gor-ham has joined rom leave so that Brewster, to his infinite disgust I doubt not, has had to fall back to second place. He and Roffe are shout the on y gloomy spirits in the command, and of Brewster I see very little. Ever since the episode of which I told you and her inest signifi-cant appearance at the depot in town while we were being switched to the northbound track I have not felt like having anything to do with him. How do you suppose are heard of our move,

"I hear that Browster and Ridgeway have had a row and do not speak. Some of the beys know what it's all about, but won't tell me. Do you know? Now, unless you wire to the contrary, I shall address my next sare of Hon. Warren L. Guthrie St. Louis." this city, his former home, eaves to-cay

Then Kenyon got a letter. He was now commanding officer of the post, and was unremitting in his thoughtfulness and attention to the households of the absent oricers. It was Rolfe who wrote to him, and Kenyon was well nigh at his wits' end in the endeavor to conjecture what it all meant.

"You remember my saying I could find that stolen picture if I could but have authority to search one room at the post. It is my conviction still that the man who goes by the name of Ellis was the thief. He had a lock box at the postoffice in town, number twenty-three and letters have been forwarded to him here by the postmaster, two of which were not addressed to Sergeant Ellis or to G. B. Ellis, Twelfth cavalry, but to Ralph Erroll, box twenty-three. When be returned from detached service this he returned from detached service this morning the sergesant major handed him his mail and saked him if those additional letters were his. He thrused red, then pals, but said yes. Both these were from Louisville, as 1 happen to know: both we e addressed in the same hand-that of an educated woman—and there is no doabt in my mind that this Ellis or Erroll las a screw loose in his record. Brewster knows something of his past, but refuses to tell. It is of vital imporice to me to find out who and what he is, for I believe him to have been guilty of a crime beside which the theft of that picture is as nothing.

"Now, I want you to do something for me. A man will call on you within for me. A man will can on you within a few days, presenting a letter of introduction from me. He is a detective from Chicago. He has certain inquiries to make at the post and in town before going to Louisville, and it should not be known that he is a detective at all. Give him every facility in your power. Intro-duce him to the postmaster as a friend of mine, if you prefer it, and let him oc-cupy my quarters while at the garrison. He will want to see the firehouse and apparatus and all about Holden's quar-ters. Kathleen is there in charge, and Holden has no objection, though he pooh poohs the efforts I am making to get at the bottom of this strange business. I hope I am not asking too much

"I saw Hearn last evening, just in from a ten days' scout with Lane's squadron over toward the Wakpa Shicha. He asked after you and sent cordial regards. There are two other fellows here who without the same and the same and the same asked the same asked to the s to were on their honeymoon tour when their regiments were ordered to the field. It recenciles one to being a bachelor

The major put the letter down and pondered long, perplexed and annoyed.

He had known Rolfe but a short time, and had learned to know him mainly through Holden. He knew him to be through Honder. He show him to resolute, positive, even aggressive at times. He admired his soldierly qualities and respected his ability. But when finally he rose from his desk after stowing that letter away old Kenyon expressed himself about as follows: "That fellow needs a wife. He is too much accustomed to having his own way. I'll be hanged if I'll do any detective work for him or anybody else. If Holden wants his house searched, Holden can

Two days later the major had the mouraful pleasure of escorting Mrs. and Miss Berrien to the train, and as it. Miss Borrien to the train, and as itseamed a way eastward a man who had stepped from the day car as Kenyon placed his fair charges on the sleeper came forward and handed him a note addressed in Rolfe's characteristic hand. "I know who you are," said Kenyon.
"You will find me at my office in the garrison when you get up there. steppi ig into the waiting wagon he bade the driver go ahead, leaving the detect-tive to come up in the post stage.

That evening he wrote a short letter to Rolle, and the gentleman from Chicago indited a long one—both of which would have served to surprise that calmir superior soldier not a little has they meached him in due course of mail, which, however, they did not. It was some time before he saw them at all, for when they were unloaded from the mailtaga at the wintry cantonment Roffe with Berrien's battalion, was miles sway.

Gefting no reply to his missives and little encouragement at the post, the strange civilian suddenly departed after three days' apparently aimless stay, and the next heard of him was in the shape of a letter from Louisville. Could Major Kenyon procure for him anyhow, any-where, a photograph of Sergeant Ellist No. Major Kenyon couldn't, and was very short in saying so.

And now December was come, and the air was crisp and keep in the valley of the Pawnee, the sunshine radiant and sparkling; but far to the north the wintry winds were howling about the flimsy tenment and whirling the snow through every cranny and crack, and the ong nights on outpost and picket were bitted cold. But through it all the various battalions of horse were sent | cal Disc scouling in turn around the reservation. and more and more the young warriors driboled away from the agencies and wers next heard of welcomed with acclamations by the savage hosts in the ciamations by the savage hosts in the fastnesses of the Bad Lands, and every hon-increased the prospect of sharp fighting in the near future. But all the letters to the carriers have the savage to the carriers to the carri letters to the anxious hearts at home were full of hope and cheer, full of prophecy that everything would soon be sett ed. The renegade bands were all 'loosted' and being slowly hemmed in. The Twelfth would est its Christmas dinner at Pawnee after all, they hoped.

And in St. Louis Miss Guthrie was exering herself to see that her charming guests were having the loveliest kind of guests were having the loveliest kind of a time. Dinners, lonchedens, cards, these teles and dancing parties followed in quick succession. The new gowns were being made as fast as famous modistes could evolve and construct them, and Whifred was rached from one scene of gayety to smother.

"Nothing could have been more charming them our welcome," wrote Mrs. Burries to her beloved Dich, "nothing more despitful than the round of entertainments, to which we are bidden. One has ments to which we are bidden. One has hardly time to think. As for writing, the is the first optiortanity I have only looked in three days, and we are home right the distance of the state of the state should be being could be brought up against young Guibrie. He never gambled, rever dissipated its any way, was bled, rever dissipased in any and a model son and brother. Nits was wild with indignation at his having been even suspected. Mr. Getthrie offered to make good the sum twice over if need be, and to bind himself for all his wealth to establish his boy's honor, and for three or four days all was excitement, and then, in the midst of it, poor Jack was found dead in his room, a half empty bottle of chloral by his bedside. The world said suicide, iguilty conscience, etceters, but Nits and others knew that he had not slept a wink since the discovery of the loss and was crazed with misery. They have always maintained it was an accidenta, overdose. But it nearly broke Mr. Guthrie's heart, and it was three years before Nits would be into society in St. Louis again. They alth to establish his boy's honor, and ge into society in St. Louis again. They went to Europe and staid there ever so ong.

"Wast makes it seem probable that he was unjustly suspected was that the bank dismissed its cashier, Jack's most intimate friend, a man two or three years older than himself, and a devoted suminer of Nita's. It was even supsed that she was engaged to him posed that she was engaged to him. He had no wealthy friends to stand up for him, and Jack's death made it appear as though there had been guilt and yet such a sum could not well have been made away with except by the knowledge or collusion of the cashler himself, and though proofs were lacking, he was discharged the very day poor, Jack was buried. No one knows whatever became of him afterward, and poor. Jack was buried. No one know, whatever became of him afterward, and whatever became of him sherward, she people settled down into the belief that this Mr. Worden was the real thief. But now comes the strangest part of it all. The president of the bank was a widew er who, for two years, had been a suitor er who, for two years, nad been a solicit of Nita's, a persistent sultor, despite her marked coldness and aversion. Four montas ago rumors began to float as to the stability of the benk; then came a run, a panic; the bank had to close its doors; immediate investigation into its account of the came and then came the affairs was made, and then came the affairs was made, and they came the discovery that the president had been a heavy speculator and had unquestionably used the funds of the bank to cover his losses. They found his body in the river four days afterward, floating cown by the old barracks, where you and had such a happy winter twenty years ago. People say now that it was President Percival himself all the time, and that he three suspicion on young and that he threw suspicion on young Guthrie because he knew the father would eagerly pay any sum to cover the loss and hide the shame; but Jack's death balked the scheme.

"Do you wonder now that Nita is sometimes overwrought and nervous? Poor girl! who knows what she has suffered? Who, to see her in society, would dream that she had ever suffered at all? Do you suppose Captain Rolfe did not hear all about this when he was here on recruiting service?

"Now you ask me to tell you every-thing about Winifred. Is she happy? Is aning about withired. Is she happy? Is she getting over her disappointment? I do not know just what to say. She is always bright and apparently joyous in society; always grateful for every kind-ness and attention shown her; but she is rarely alone one minute from morning until late at night, and I cannot be sure. She never speaks of him; and in all the whirl of social gavety here, and the attention she receives on every side. I think, I hope, she may forget her girlish sentiment. Time will-show."

Time might have shown, but time was not accorded. Coming home late one night from a delightful dance their carriage stopped outside the massive porte-cochere of the Guthrie homestead instead of driving right in.
"What is it, James?" asked Miss Guth-

It was Jennie, with a grave, anxious face, at sight of which Mrs. Berrien' fairly sprang from the carriage. "You have ill news, Mrs. Holden. What is it? Tell me st once."

This has just come from my husband," was the trembling answer as she held forth a telegram: "Major Berrien's wound serious, but not fatal. Mrs. Ber rien must not be slarmed. Do not be lieve sensational newspaper reports of disaster. Wounded doing well." TO BE CONTINUED.

A Mother Baved Her Boy's Life.

"I believe lactated food saved our little boy's life," says Mrs. Jennie Bashford, of Quinter, Kansas. "He was poor and puny, and cried all the time, until we commenced feeding him the food. He is now seven months old, fat and hearty, and he owes it all to lactated food."

WUN LUNG.

This is the queer name of a Chinese laundryman in Hartford, but he has probably two lungs, like most of us. Some crying babies seem to have a dozen. Lungs should be sound, or the voice will have a weakly sound. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes strong lungs, drives the cough away, generates good blood, tones the nerves, builds up the human wreck and makes "another man" of him. Night-aweats, blood-spitting, short breath, bronchitts, asthma, and all alarmaling forerunners of Consumption, are pestively cured by this unapproachable remidely. If taken in time, Consumption itself can be battled. aug 15
